

Employee Induction Policy

Induction is the provision and receipt of information, instruction, training and supervision required for the safe performance of new work at a basic minimum standard of competence. It is important that all new staff and volunteers, and staff undertaking new work, receive adequate and appropriate induction training and information.

1. Policy Objectives

1.1. To ensure that all new employees receive appropriate information, instruction and training to enable them to understand how their job fits in with the Ashton Gate Out of School Care (AGOSC) as well as to undertake that job without risk to the health and safety of themselves or others.

1.2. To ensure that new employees receive information to enable them to understand their rights and responsibilities according to the AGOSC's policies and procedures and statutory legislation.

1.3. To ensure that new employees are aware of relevant employment and other administrative procedures.

1.4. To ensure that employees receive adequate and appropriate assistance and training in the performance of tasks they have not previously undertaken.

1.5. To ensure that new employees are introduced to other workers.

1.6. To ensure details of terms and conditions and how/when wages will be paid is known.

2. Principles

2.1. Information and instruction must be given in way that is understandable and is suitable for the knowledge and skill of the individual employee.

2.2. Training must be designed to ensure that employees can gain the appropriate levels of competence to minimise their exposure to risks arising from the work.

2.3. Employees gain more job satisfaction and are more productive when they can see how their job fits into the organisation and contributes to its goals and targets.

2.4. Employees have a right to information on what the organisation expects of them.

3. Responsibilities

Under section 19 of the Occupational Health, Safety and Welfare Act:

'The Head or Chief Officer of the organisation is responsible to ensure that adequate induction programmes and procedures are in place. This would include providing information relating to Occupational Health, Safety and Welfare in the workplace and to provide information, instruction, training and supervision to minimise risks before work commences or before a change in work occurs.'

The Management Committee (MC)/Play Centre Manager is responsible for ensuring that each new employee, or employee who is given new work, receives the level of induction they require, and which is sufficient to meet the requirements of this policy and the law.

4. Procedures

The Induction Programme – The MC/Play Centre Manager will ensure that all new employees are given:

- A written copy of their induction programme.
- Local information necessary for the job.
- Appropriate information, training and supervision for the job they will be doing.

New work for existing employees – The MC/Play Centre Manager will assess the standards of competencies required to do the work effectively and safely. They will ensure that employees are given the appropriate training, information and supervision to enable them to acquire these standards of competencies before commencing the work.
